("Lion"), Vari ("Vulture"), etc. are intended to deceive the evil spirits, who are able to take the life of the child only if they can call it by its true name.[58]

4. Segregation

A Lesghian woman becomes unclean through childbirth, and hence the father may not be present at the birth nor during the entire period of uncleaness, which lasts for several weeks.[59] Child-bearing renders the mother unclean in Ossetia as well. The Mountain Georgians have special birthhouses for expectent mothers. In Svanetia the mother is unclean for 40 days,[60] in Khevsuria and Pshavia, a few days longer.[61] A woman can be cleansed (in Khevsuria and Pshavia) by washing her hair in cow's urine.[62] In Ossetia a woman is considered unclean for six weeks after childbirth. During this period she is not allowed to work, except to sweep the floor and look after the children. The marital act is likewise forbidden.[63]

5. Weaning

Very little data is available regarding weaning of children and taboos during the period of lactation. As a general rule, the Lesghians wean their children at the age of five or six.[64] The Avars usually do not wean them before they have reached the use of reason.[65] Pshav children are weaned at the age of four.

6. Fire-place Ceremony

We have seen what an important part the hearth played in the marriage ceremonies of the Northwestern Caucasians, the Ingushi and Ossetes. By circling round the hearth the bride officially became a member of the family. We should also expect a birth ceremony of some sort or other at the fire-place, by which the infant would likewise be officially recognized as a fully fledged member of the family and by which the newborn would come in contact with the ancestors and receive their protection. We find such a ceremony among the neighbouring peoples of Iranian stock, the Ossetes[66] and the Kurds.[67] Though the hearth

---

[58] Pčelina, "Rodil'nye obyčai u Osetin," SE, 1937, No. 4, p. 98.
For Ossetine naming ceremony, see op. cit., pp. 96 ff.
Could not this fondness for animal names be a vestige of individual totemism?

[59] Kovalevskij, "Iranian Culture in the Caucasus," The Archaeological Review, June, 1888, cited by Kovalevskij, Zakon, II, p. 202. See also op. cit., I, pp. 97 f, 139 f.

[60] Dubrovin, Istorija, I, ii, p. 110.

[61] G. Demidov, V učelijach pervobytnoj gruzii (Chevsuretija), Moscow-Leningrad, 1930, p. 16. Pužidaev (Gorcy severnago kavkaza, p. 107) says that the Khevsur mother is "unclean" for 30 days.

[62] Demidov, l. c. After delivery, the mother must remain in the birth-hut for two weeks; after that she must live in the stable for about five weeks. S. I. Makalatija, op. cit., p. 112. Today the Pshavs use holy water instead of urine (ibid.).

[63] Pčelina, op. cit., p. 99.

[64] Nansen, op. cit., p. 104.

[65] Erckert, op. cit., p. 268.

[66] Pčelina, op. cit., p. 93.

[67] Jankó, Népszájzi, etc. Zichy's Kaukázusi és középázsiai utazásai, p. 63.